

Great REDUCTION Sale! "THE FAIR" Embroideries

302, 504, 506, 508, 510 South 13th St. Regardless of Cost.

$20,000 Worth. GRAND CLEARING SALE.

Manufacture of Fecker & Co., St. Gallen, Switzerland. Purchased at 33 1-3 Cents on the Dollar.

Cheviot - Suitings, In two-toned stripes; regular price, 45c. Reduction Price, 21c	All Wool Cashmere Regular price, 75c. Reduction Price, 42c	30,000 YARDS SWISS Embroidered FLOUNCINGS. At 1/4 Regular At 1/3 Values. At 1/2 Values. A LIKE OPPORTUNITY HAS NEVER BEEN KNOWN.	500 STYLES Hemstitched Skirtings, Corded Skirtings, Tucked Skirtings, Revered Skirtings, Styles and Qualities Unsurpassable. DO NOT MISS THIS UNREPEATABLE CHANCE FOR A BARGAIN.
40-INCH WIDE PLAID CASHMERES Regular 20 cent goods. Reduction Price, 27c	42-INCH ALL WOOL Silk Finished Tricots In all Newest Shades. Reduction Price, 50c	Cambric Edgings Insertions 5c. Worth 15c. 10c. Worth 25c. 15c. Worth 35c.	69c
ALL WOOL FANCY - SUITINGS, Checks and New Effects, suitable for Spring Wear. Reduction Price, 39c	42-INCH ALL WOOL FOULE DE BEIGES, Elegant material for travelling dress; was $2.25. Reduction Price, 75c	10,000 YARDS ORIENTAL LACES, Bought at the Great New York Auction Sale of Field, Chapman & Fenner, at ONE-FOURTH THEIR REAL VALUE. ALL ORIENTAL 5 CENTS YARD. Worth 20c.	89c
42-INCH ALL WOOL Mixed Beiges, In New Spring Shades; regular price 75c. Reduction Price, 47c	42-INCH ALL WOOL Persian - Novelties. Suitable to make up combinations in the latest effects; worth $1.50. Reduction Price, 85c	10,000 YARDS ORIENTAL LACES, Bought at the Great New York Auction Sale of Field, Chapman & Fenner, at ONE-FOURTH THEIR REAL VALUE. ALL ORIENTAL 10 CENTS YARD. Worth 40c.	10c
40-INCH WIDE All Wool Albatross, In Evening Shades; regular price was 75c. Reduction Price, 37c	42-INCH ALL WOOL Silk Warp Henrietta Black and colors; regular price was $1.75. Reduction Price, $1.00	25 CENTS YARD. Worth $1.00.

J. L. BRADY & SONS,

502, 504, 506, 508, and 510 South 13th Street.

LADIES' - HOSIERY. Ladies' Fine Imported 25c - Brilliant Lisle Thread Hose - 25c Ladies' Fancy Colored 19c - IMPORTED SEAMLESS HOSE - 19c Ladies' Fancy Striped 10c - COTTON HOSE - 10c	LADIES' - JERSEY VESTS. Ladies' Fine Ribbed 15c Ladies' Elegant Silk Trimmed 29c
LADIES' CORSETS. Ladies' Imported French Woven 75c Mikado Corsets 33c Dr. Hamilton's Wonderful 69c English Sateen 49c

WASHINGTON INAUGURATED.

The Ceremonies and Enthusiasm of a Noted Day.

BEGINNING OF NATIONAL LIFE.

The Journey From Mount Vernon to New York—Incidents on the Way—The Customs of Our Ancestors.

One Hundred Years Ago.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 28, 1890.

On the 14th of April Charles Thompson, who had been for fifteen years the secretary of the continental congress, and who was chosen by the first national congress as its messenger, arrived at the gates of Mount Vernon, bearing the official notification of the election. The memorable document read:

[Read.] Be it known, That the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America, being convened at the city of New York, on the sixth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, the undersigned, appointed president of the senate, for the sole purpose of receiving, opening and counting the votes of the electors, did, in the presence of the senate and house of representatives, open all the certificates and count the votes of the electors for the president and for a vice-president, by which it appears that George Washington, esquire, was unanimously elected, agreeably to the constitution, to the office of president of the United States of America. In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal.

JOHN LANGDON.

WASHINGTON'S ACCEPTANCE.

When, Tuesday December 23, 1783, General Washington presented to congress at Annapolis, Md., the formal resignation of his commission as General and Commander-in-Chief, he expressed a determination never again to re-enter public life, though he was then less than fifty-two years of age and in the full vigor of physical and mental manhood. But in the succeeding two years events had so shaped themselves that he was the only man in the infant republic who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation. Not that the four or five millions of people were destitute of statesmen, patriots, soldiers, sailors, and all the shades of individuality needed for the emergencies of the day. Benjamin Franklin, though a very old man, was still alive, and by a way of his own, he was the only man in the country who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation. Not that the four or five millions of people were destitute of statesmen, patriots, soldiers, sailors, and all the shades of individuality needed for the emergencies of the day. Benjamin Franklin, though a very old man, was still alive, and by a way of his own, he was the only man in the country who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation.

WASHINGTON'S ACCEPTANCE.

When, Tuesday December 23, 1783, General Washington presented to congress at Annapolis, Md., the formal resignation of his commission as General and Commander-in-Chief, he expressed a determination never again to re-enter public life, though he was then less than fifty-two years of age and in the full vigor of physical and mental manhood. But in the succeeding two years events had so shaped themselves that he was the only man in the infant republic who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation. Not that the four or five millions of people were destitute of statesmen, patriots, soldiers, sailors, and all the shades of individuality needed for the emergencies of the day. Benjamin Franklin, though a very old man, was still alive, and by a way of his own, he was the only man in the country who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation.

WASHINGTON'S ACCEPTANCE.

When, Tuesday December 23, 1783, General Washington presented to congress at Annapolis, Md., the formal resignation of his commission as General and Commander-in-Chief, he expressed a determination never again to re-enter public life, though he was then less than fifty-two years of age and in the full vigor of physical and mental manhood. But in the succeeding two years events had so shaped themselves that he was the only man in the infant republic who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation. Not that the four or five millions of people were destitute of statesmen, patriots, soldiers, sailors, and all the shades of individuality needed for the emergencies of the day. Benjamin Franklin, though a very old man, was still alive, and by a way of his own, he was the only man in the country who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation.

WASHINGTON'S ACCEPTANCE.

When, Tuesday December 23, 1783, General Washington presented to congress at Annapolis, Md., the formal resignation of his commission as General and Commander-in-Chief, he expressed a determination never again to re-enter public life, though he was then less than fifty-two years of age and in the full vigor of physical and mental manhood. But in the succeeding two years events had so shaped themselves that he was the only man in the infant republic who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation. Not that the four or five millions of people were destitute of statesmen, patriots, soldiers, sailors, and all the shades of individuality needed for the emergencies of the day. Benjamin Franklin, though a very old man, was still alive, and by a way of his own, he was the only man in the country who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation.

WASHINGTON'S ACCEPTANCE.

When, Tuesday December 23, 1783, General Washington presented to congress at Annapolis, Md., the formal resignation of his commission as General and Commander-in-Chief, he expressed a determination never again to re-enter public life, though he was then less than fifty-two years of age and in the full vigor of physical and mental manhood. But in the succeeding two years events had so shaped themselves that he was the only man in the infant republic who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation. Not that the four or five millions of people were destitute of statesmen, patriots, soldiers, sailors, and all the shades of individuality needed for the emergencies of the day. Benjamin Franklin, though a very old man, was still alive, and by a way of his own, he was the only man in the country who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation.

WASHINGTON'S ACCEPTANCE.

When, Tuesday December 23, 1783, General Washington presented to congress at Annapolis, Md., the formal resignation of his commission as General and Commander-in-Chief, he expressed a determination never again to re-enter public life, though he was then less than fifty-two years of age and in the full vigor of physical and mental manhood. But in the succeeding two years events had so shaped themselves that he was the only man in the infant republic who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation. Not that the four or five millions of people were destitute of statesmen, patriots, soldiers, sailors, and all the shades of individuality needed for the emergencies of the day. Benjamin Franklin, though a very old man, was still alive, and by a way of his own, he was the only man in the country who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation.

WASHINGTON'S ACCEPTANCE.

When, Tuesday December 23, 1783, General Washington presented to congress at Annapolis, Md., the formal resignation of his commission as General and Commander-in-Chief, he expressed a determination never again to re-enter public life, though he was then less than fifty-two years of age and in the full vigor of physical and mental manhood. But in the succeeding two years events had so shaped themselves that he was the only man in the infant republic who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation. Not that the four or five millions of people were destitute of statesmen, patriots, soldiers, sailors, and all the shades of individuality needed for the emergencies of the day. Benjamin Franklin, though a very old man, was still alive, and by a way of his own, he was the only man in the country who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation.

WASHINGTON'S ACCEPTANCE.

When, Tuesday December 23, 1783, General Washington presented to congress at Annapolis, Md., the formal resignation of his commission as General and Commander-in-Chief, he expressed a determination never again to re-enter public life, though he was then less than fifty-two years of age and in the full vigor of physical and mental manhood. But in the succeeding two years events had so shaped themselves that he was the only man in the infant republic who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation. Not that the four or five millions of people were destitute of statesmen, patriots, soldiers, sailors, and all the shades of individuality needed for the emergencies of the day. Benjamin Franklin, though a very old man, was still alive, and by a way of his own, he was the only man in the country who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation.

WASHINGTON'S ACCEPTANCE.

When, Tuesday December 23, 1783, General Washington presented to congress at Annapolis, Md., the formal resignation of his commission as General and Commander-in-Chief, he expressed a determination never again to re-enter public life, though he was then less than fifty-two years of age and in the full vigor of physical and mental manhood. But in the succeeding two years events had so shaped themselves that he was the only man in the infant republic who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation. Not that the four or five millions of people were destitute of statesmen, patriots, soldiers, sailors, and all the shades of individuality needed for the emergencies of the day. Benjamin Franklin, though a very old man, was still alive, and by a way of his own, he was the only man in the country who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation.

WASHINGTON'S ACCEPTANCE.

When, Tuesday December 23, 1783, General Washington presented to congress at Annapolis, Md., the formal resignation of his commission as General and Commander-in-Chief, he expressed a determination never again to re-enter public life, though he was then less than fifty-two years of age and in the full vigor of physical and mental manhood. But in the succeeding two years events had so shaped themselves that he was the only man in the infant republic who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation. Not that the four or five millions of people were destitute of statesmen, patriots, soldiers, sailors, and all the shades of individuality needed for the emergencies of the day. Benjamin Franklin, though a very old man, was still alive, and by a way of his own, he was the only man in the country who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation.

WASHINGTON'S ACCEPTANCE.

When, Tuesday December 23, 1783, General Washington presented to congress at Annapolis, Md., the formal resignation of his commission as General and Commander-in-Chief, he expressed a determination never again to re-enter public life, though he was then less than fifty-two years of age and in the full vigor of physical and mental manhood. But in the succeeding two years events had so shaped themselves that he was the only man in the infant republic who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation. Not that the four or five millions of people were destitute of statesmen, patriots, soldiers, sailors, and all the shades of individuality needed for the emergencies of the day. Benjamin Franklin, though a very old man, was still alive, and by a way of his own, he was the only man in the country who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation.

WASHINGTON'S ACCEPTANCE.

When, Tuesday December 23, 1783, General Washington presented to congress at Annapolis, Md., the formal resignation of his commission as General and Commander-in-Chief, he expressed a determination never again to re-enter public life, though he was then less than fifty-two years of age and in the full vigor of physical and mental manhood. But in the succeeding two years events had so shaped themselves that he was the only man in the infant republic who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation. Not that the four or five millions of people were destitute of statesmen, patriots, soldiers, sailors, and all the shades of individuality needed for the emergencies of the day. Benjamin Franklin, though a very old man, was still alive, and by a way of his own, he was the only man in the country who could exercise a sane and disinterested influence on the destinies of the nation.

WASHINGTON'S ACCEPTANCE.